

Ashley Jones is a Tampa native. She started her music career as a student in Tallahassee, FL, then made her way to New York City, where she performed at some of the Big Apple's most respected music venues for singer-songwriters (CB's, The Living Room, The Bitter End, The Knitting Factory). After six years of city life and four independent albums, Ashley's next musical adventure took her across the ocean to Rwanda, where she hoped to capture in song the supernatural hope she had witnessed within the next generation of a country defined by poverty, sickness and genocide. Now she's back in the USA with the EP she recorded entirely in Rwanda titled "The World Should See Her Face", eight songs and a countless number of stories from her life-changing five months in The Land of a Thousand Hills.
